Introduction

While the world has moved very quickly, governments have struggled to keep pace. And delivering on the ‘customer promise’ remains as much of a challenge now as it was years ago!

Not only have expectations risen exponentially with rapid developments in new technology, but the funds for investing in public services have dried up in many countries. And the assumptions underlying apparently successful models of the past, such as New Public Management, are being challenged.

Government and public sector organisations worldwide must adjust to the new reality of ‘doing more for less’ (or ‘doing less for less’) and focus on the outcomes society needs and wants. Public bodies must also decide if they want to consume the legacy left behind by predecessors, or create a new legacy for the next generation.

This workshop addresses the challenges for government at all levels to deliver the outcomes people want!

Objectives

By the end of this course practitioners shall learn to:

- Understanding user needs through ‘customer insight’;
- Pulling down the silo walls to create connected government;
- Building capacity to deliver results;
- Realizing the benefits; and continuously innovating to sustain them

Who Should Attend?

- Senior Managers and Department Heads
- Planning, Marketing and Finance Managers
- Section Heads and Government Employees at all levels.
